

Calling Teachers: ever considered teaching in a Methodist School?

Methodist Schools

Methodist Schools can be found all over the country (England and one in Wales). Some are small (fewer than 100 children), some are large (more than 1,000 children), some are under Local Authority control, some are jointly founded with the Church of England, some are Academies and some are Independent Schools.

Methodist Schools all have a number of things in common:

- Foundations that reflect their roots in the Methodist Church
- A need for teachers who understand the basic beliefs of the Church and can make these relevant in the daily operation and management of the schools
- A need for teachers who see their career as a vocation and are prepared to commit to the whole life of the school
- They are non-selective academically

They address the needs of a wide range of children giving everyone the opportunity to be the best that they can be.

Why apply to teach in a Methodist School?

Methodist Schools provide a professional context in which teachers can work out their faith.

Our school communities have children and staff of all faiths and none but all are founded as Methodist communities so are enriched by the informed expertise of Christian/Methodist teachers.

We aim for our schools to be beacons of excellence in teaching and learning and need the best possible teachers to achieve this.

We aim to educate the whole child and need teachers who are “whole people” to engage with this.

Primary or Secondary?

Our state schools and academies are currently all in the primary phase.

Our independent schools have junior sections, a few are 3-11 only but most offer continuity of education from 3 to 18 with thriving sixth forms. There are also strong links with universities and ambitious professional development programmes.
